Students are receiving information and products from a multitude of sources. Their access to information and communication is shifting from broadcast-based TV to the global web. Many have heard about MOOCs (Massive Open Online Courses) but few understand what they mean in terms of real change. At its core, MOOCs involve distribution. Everyone with access to the internet can take a course. But this alone is not revolutionary. In fact, the internet has been critical to providing access to higher education since its inception. More relevantly, MOOCs do something that broadcast-based online systems cannot - offer 'mass' online courses on a large scale. Mass distribution provides several benefits for both the learner and the education provider. As learners, many MOOCs have courses that meet student learning objectives but are difficult to find. And traditional online courses, especially at the graduate level, are often onerous to access and difficult to manage. Many MOOCs, in contrast, offer several courses that are often free of charge. This allows for more access to education without sacrificing financial support for research or teaching. Another benefit to MOOCs is that it provides an

PCH-1 Puzzler World PCH-1 is a puzzle video game console developed by SoftKey and released for the Nintendo

Entertainment System in 1991 and for the Atari ST in 1992. It was marketed as one of the "world's first unique "video-puzzle" games". Its main feature is the inclusion of a 32-mm floppy disk which holds a jumbled version of the puzzle, and allows the player to easily and rapidly solve the puzzle while playing by bouncing a stylus on the corresponding section of the puzzle matrix. The puzzles can take from 15 seconds to an hour to complete, and can be destroyed as well as solved. The game was released under the name Phuzzle in Canada and Puzzler World in Europe. It was released exclusively in Europe in 1992 and remained exclusive until 1995. A version for the Atari ST was never released, and the NES version was also never released in Japan. While it was a commercial failure, the game received favourable reviews for its innovative design. A sequel, Puzzler World 2, was planned to be released for the Game Boy, but it was cancelled due to poor sales figures. Gameplay

Puzzler World is a puzzle video game in which players solve the puzzles while watching the story unfold in an interactive manner. The player must employ logic and observation skills to solve the puzzles. The game allows the player to "shoot" a colloquialism to jump onto the correct solution; this can be quickly achieved by simply bouncing a stylus on a specific area of the puzzle. The puzzle consists of a visual layout of a large white puzzle matrix, described as a "world" by the game's instruction manual. A piece of the puzzle matrix can be removed or distorted by touching and bouncing, by shooting, and by taking certain actions by pressing certain buttons. The player solves the puzzle matrices by rotating, moving, and removing puzzle pieces of differing sizes. The puzzles require split-second timing, since the player is able to destroy them at any time after solving the puzzle. The player can obtain a time penalty at any time by shooting without "bouncing the stylus". The game is divided into "routine", "adventure", and "surprise" modes. In the adventure mode, the player must solve puzzles while exploring various locations in order to defeat a "Monster". In the surprise mode, the player solves puzzles in order to gain large amounts of cash, and then moves on to more difficult tasks. Development and release P

Fly... shoot... Flee! The year is 2022. Around the world, the military is dealing with “the aliens problem” and with dwindling funds, they’ve chosen to sell their best assets off to private security contractors. You’ve just joined Lucas Brazier and his crew on their last mission. Their target, the firebird, has been spotted by the Air Force once again, and they need to stop it at all costs. But their launch codes are incorrect, so there's only one solution; employ the private industry. After several months of training and missions in simulators, you’re ready for your first real assignment, tracking and destroying the mythical firebird. It’s not just an ordinary UFO, it’s the fastest UFO in the world and can make its target disappear in a matter of seconds. The world is at stake. Fight, survive and fly faster than ever! The game is free and no data or ads are stored on the user's device. We do not show ads, nor ask the user for any permissions or information. How the game plays? F.A.T.U.L.O.: You need to push the right keys to dodge bullets, dodge the lasers and then dodge the other UFOs. The more your enemies fall, the higher your score. When they collide with each other, the game ends and you get a new set of enemies and/or targets. You can buy 3 different kinds of missiles and you can upgrade them to make them more powerful. Each enemy has their own bonuses: Laser emitters, aerodynamic properties, and so on. Try to figure out which ones are the best and which ones you need to avoid. The game is free to play and no data or ads are stored on the user's device. We do not show ads, nor ask the user for any permissions or information.
