Will You Be Young and Carefree in 2016? From the comfort of your own home, you can look back at 2015 with fondness. It's been a healthy, productive, and a free year for you. On the other hand, you can look forward to some incredible opportunities for 2016. I just can't wait to see what's in store for you. Today, I'm going to share with you some life lessons I learned from the past year of my life. I know that you're no stranger to hard times, or probably enjoy some challenges. Your job is to have fun while you struggle, but ultimately prosper. If you were to ask me who I am, how did I live my life in 2015, it would be so simple: I laid down my bitterness and accepted that I have no choice but to move on. It's not like everything turned out great in the last year. It was also, quite the opposite. I got laid off two times. I've been broke at times, and even my health affected by numerous injuries. I went through many obstacles and failed to make connections with certain people in my life. But even in the worst of times, I managed to pick up the pieces and move on. I met people from all walks of life, and from all parts of the world. I also started learning the language again, and practiced my priorities. Yes, my priorities. I have to accept that some things just didn't turn out as expected. But that's all part of life, which we all must face at one time or another. Here's my challenge to you: this year, a brand-new year starts on January 1st, 2016. If you were to ask me who I am, how did I live my life in 2015, it would be so simple: I laid down my bitterness and accepted that I have no choice but to move on. As we start the New Year, a lot of people might be feeling negative thoughts of 2015. Everyone feels a sense of regret at some points in their life. There were a lot of things that we wished we had done differently. The past six months have been a very difficult period for a lot of people in the world. At some point, it's best to look back and reflect on our journey so far. But you can only do that when you look into your past, without looking into other people's past. Here's the thing: nobody can be perfect === grizzlies Go away Socioeconomic and insurance coverage status rthopaedic trauma patients: implications for clinical outcomes. arities between socioeconomic status (SES) and access to health is a major problem in the United States. The current study examines hypothesis that disparities in socio-economic and insurance status exist among patients with orthopaedic trauma injuries and that disparities exist among patients with similar types of injuries. Additionally, we hypothesize that disparities exist among injuries grouped according to their corresponding procedures. The National Sample Survey (NSS) data were obtained from the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) for the years 2000, 2005, and 2010, and were used to identify orthopaedic trauma patients with public insurance and Medicare coverage. The population of orthopaedic trauma patients was randomly selected using Stata's Survey Dataset (univariate) and (multivariate) commands, and was analyzed using the Stata "Analyze" package, with multiple regression, logistic regression, and chi-square analysis performed. Comparison of the three survey years from 2010 shows a reduction in social-economic class disparities among orthopaedic trauma patients with public insurance. No significant differences were observed for managed care patients. Orthopaedic trauma patients with Medicare insurance have decreased disparities with time. The experience of Medicare insurance can exceed that of public insurance. SES disparities among orthopaedic trauma patients decrease over time. SES disparities among Medicare patients exceed public insurance patients, and are likely to increase with time. The relationship between type of injury (i.e. fracture, dislocation, ligamentous injury) and insurance is significant and suggests that the surgical treatment of patients with these two injuries may not mitigate disparities in SES.
