Fox Technologies, the company that created FoxPro, merged with Microsoft in 1992. In 1995, Visual FoxPro 3.0 was released. This was the first "Visual" version, and it's believed that originally, Microsoft worked with Grumman Aerospace to develop the basic elements of Visual FoxPro. However, within a year, Grumman provided the source code for the language and the team at Microsoft started making modifications to provide a more practical database-centered language that could be used on the desktop as a stand-alone "database appliance." Classic Windows Desktop and online software and
